19. Sam is at a work party at his office where alcohol is served. He is supposed to leave by 8pm to pick up his son from a friend's house. Sam thinks to himself, "I have a couple of hours before I need to leave. Plus everyone here is drinking, so why shouldn't I drink too?" He feels happy about getting to party with his co-workers and has five drinks over the next two hours. He drives to pick up his son impaired. More effective self-talk would have been Sam thinking to himself:
- I need to pick up my son in a few hours. My son is important to me. I better not drink if I am driving.
  - I deserve to drink. My job is hard.
  - Everyone else is drinking, and there are people who will for sure drink more than me. I'm sure that they will be driving home.
  - A few glasses of wine isn't a big deal. Wine doesn't get me as drunk as liquor. I'm smart enough not to get a DUI.
  - I can just skip the freeway and take the side streets.
